A concise natural history of East and West Florida; containing an account of the natural produce of all the southern part of British America, in... Bernard Romans

"All things contained in the compass of the universe declare, as it were with one accord, the infinite wisdom of the Creator; for whatever strikes our senses, whatever is the object of our thoughts, is so contrived, as to assist in manifesting the divine glory (i. e.) the ultimate end which God proposed in all his works. Whoever duly turns his attention to the things on this our terraqueous globe, must necessarily confess, that they are so connected, so linked together, that they all tend to the same end, and to this end a vast number of intermediate ends are necessary."

This is an edition of a classical book first published in the eighteenth century.
