The year is 1941. The flames of war rage across the globe. In Asia and the Pacific, the Rising Sun of Imperial Japan ascends higher and higher, its empire expanding with every step of its seemingly unstoppable armies. In the United States, Thomas Riker, a young eighteen year-old from St. Louis, Missouri, with dreams of carrying on his family's legacy of military service, reports for duty as a newly-minted private in the United States Marine Corps. But when the Japanese attack the US base at Pearl Harbor, Pvt. Riker, his fellow Marines, and the entire nation are plunged into the brutal maelstrom of war. Untried and untested, Riker and his brothers-in-arms face a battle-hardened enemy in the sweltering jungles of Guadalcanal, an enemy that is willing to die to a man for the victory of their Emperor and empire.

When a powerful Japanese attack threatens to overrun the Americans' principal lifeline on the island, Pvt. Riker and his Marine rifle company find themselves a part of the razor thin line upon which the fate of the entire US operation depends. In the swirling chaos of war, Riker and his comrades must not only endure the constant enemy onslaughts, but also the unrelenting stress of combat. It is here, thousands of miles from home against a tough and determined enemy, where these young Marines will fight for their country, their lives, and for each other as they engage their foe in one of the fiercest battles of the Pacific War.
